studies, historical documents, cultural texts, and political theorizations to reconfigure the historical complexities of cold war modernity in a transpacific context. Instead of treating 'cold war' as a reified object of study qualified by empirical categorization of historical and geopolitical entities or aggregates of historical numbers and statistics, we will approach 'cold war' by understanding it as a set of knowledge production of scientific and medical discourses, political and economic organizing of social activities, biopolitical governance of life and labor, as well as cultural imaginary of the human.

Note to the interested undergraduates: this course welcomes the interested and advanced undergraduates, especially those in their 3rd or 4th year. It is required for you to contact me and gain my permission to add this course. You must show up on the first day of the class too. 本課程歡迎有興趣的大三大四學生選修，但必須事先聯絡授課老師取得同意，且開學第一堂課不得缺席。

Course Title: Transpacific Cold War Divisions of Colonial Modernities

This course seeks to understand the entangled histories of colonialism and cold war divisions of modernity that grow out of and continue to inform our modern categorization of humanity, liberalism, democracy and scientific rationality in postcolonial contemporary societies. We will read a range of case studies, historical documents, cultural texts, and political theorizations to reconfigure the historical complexities of cold war modernity in a transpacific context. Instead of treating 'cold war' as a reified object of study qualified by empirical categorization of historical and geopolitical entities or aggregates of historical numbers and statistics, we will approach 'cold war' by understanding it as a set of knowledge production of scientific and medical discourses, political and economic organizing of social activities, biopolitical governance of life and labor, as well as cultural imaginary of the human.
